Students will engage architectural programming as a means to explore architectural issues and their intellectual impact on built cultural responses in the urban or academic environments. Whether defining a “thesis” exploration or a professionally based project, programming provides a platform to understand both the base quantification of subject needs as well the intellectual underpinnings that allow for a comprehensive critical inquiry of the site, spatial and material challenges imbedded in each built response.